How Do I Know If I Need an Electrician?

- 1 You have a sparking appliance fixture or electrical breaker. If something is sparking, call an electrician right away!
- 2 You receive a shock when you touch a light switch, outlet, or other electrical system surfaces in your home. If you are receiving electrical shocks from items in your home, it can be due to faulty wiring and is a potential fire hazard.
- 3 The fuses keep blowing, or your circuit breaker keeps tripping. Some people screw in a fuse with more amps and think the problem is solved, but this creates a fire hazard.

Tell Scammers TO SCRAM

Know the signs to spot and stop scammers

Unfortunately, it is not uncommon for criminals to exploit our reliance on electricity to try and scam NEC members out of their money. Their methods can be sophisticated enough to trick even savvy consumers, but following a few simple steps can help ensure you never fall victim to these scams

If you are contacted by someone claiming to be from NEC threatening to shut off your power if they don't receive immediate payment, do not pay them, and contact us right away at 1-800-632-9288.

We will never ask you to pay using a prepaid card, call you from an out-of-state number, or instruct you not to call a listed NEC number to make payment.

Our employees work in the field to collect payments at residential and commercial locations, but they will never accept cash. All NEC employees carry photo identification badges, travel in company vehicles, and wear NEC uniform shirts.
